Subject: Microsoft Settlement

From what I have read in the press concerning the proposed settlement, it does not force Microsoft to abandon any of the practices that caused the lawsuit to be applied. Does the three person "watchdog council" have any enforcement powers? Does anyone else? I am not aware that Microsoft has shown any change of policy, which appears to be "we want to control every aspect of computers and their use", and I don't think the proposed settlement has any power to force them to change.
